Please Note:

- The literature review is not simply a summary of articles; it's a critical analysis that identifies patterns, gaps, and the overall landscape of the field.
- Your review should be clear, cohesive, and well-organized to guide the reader through the existing research and set the stage for your own study.

Key Guidelines for Writing a Strong Literature Review:

1. Introduction and Conclusion:

- Your literature review should begin with an introduction, providing necessary background information like the author name, article or book title, year of publication (follow APA format)
- Conclude with a summary that highlights the implications of your findings and discusses areas where further research is needed, specifically in relation to your own research project.

2. Avoid Direct Quotations:

- Paraphrase the material you present. This is an opportunity to demonstrate your understanding and interpret the literature in your own words. Direct quotations should be avoided, as this assignment aims to reflect your synthesis of the sources.

3. Identify the Research Gap:

- As you review the literature, you should identify gaps or areas where current research is lacking. Clearly outline where the existing studies fall short, or where further exploration could add value to the field. This will demonstrate your ability to critically analyze the literature and help justify the need for your own research.

4. Scope of Your Research Topic:

- In addition to identifying the research gap, you should define the scope of your research topic. Clearly outline the boundaries of your study, including what will and will not be covered in your research. This helps to focus your investigation and provides clarity on what your research will contribute to the field.

We look forward to seeing your work and how you synthesize the literature on your chosen topic.
